Break the Silence on Mood Disorders!
Countering Stigma Experienced by Young Adults with Openness & Understanding

According to a recent survey by NAMI/Harris Poll, young adults (18-34) who have mood disorders are not getting the treatment they need.

68%
report that there has been a time when they wanted mental health treatment but did not receive it. Many are fearful of being labeled with a mental illness diagnosis if they seek help.

Mood disorder symptoms can include:
- Changes in sleeping habits/Feeling tired or wired
- Feeling excessively sad or empty
- Beasting energy or fear
- Changes in eating habits
- Awareness of friends & social withdrawal
- Trouble concentrating or learning
- Feeling hopeless, empty, or restless
- Provisions of asking help or feeling safe
- Extreme mood changes
- Thoughts of suicide or death

1 in 3 (32%)
of young adult respondents who had gone without treatment when they wanted it say fear of judgment prevented them from seeking help.

While stigma is a barrier to getting help for people of all ages, it is much higher for younger adults than for other age groups.

23% of those aged 35-64
19% of those aged 65 and over

71% of young adult respondents who have shared their experiences agree that others are interested and supportive.

SHARING HELPS

3 out of 4 (75%)

Agreed: “When I tell others about my mood disorder, they share my own mental health experiences.”

We Can All Help Reduce Stigma

Talk openly about mental health and share your experience with mental health challenges.

Use non-stigmatizing language:
1. Use “experiences” language e.g., “talk less about ‘melancholia’”
2. Avoid labels for mental illness e.g., “it’s not a mental illness.”
3. Speak about mental health as affected by e.g., “These PTSD’s”

Be understanding and supportive of others’ journeys to recovery.
