Meet my friend, Tom Cruz, #Veteran

- Like many Veterans, Tom has an amazing story.
- Like many people who have survived a suicide attempt, Tom has an amazing story.

But, as Paul Harvey says, today is about "the REST of the story."
"If you want to know how wonderful drill was, ask your First Sergeant. If you want to know how drill really went, you go on Facebook." --Actual quote, name redacted.

Most Veterans belong to multiple social media communities, both "official" and unofficial, public, and private

Best ones involve PoCs for getting help and resources to other Veterans

Best ones have SOP for responding to crisis.

Amazing ones get crisis training for mods/influencers.
Veteran social media communities vary

Like all social groups, the health of the group depends, heavily, on the health and insight of the group leaders.

Many combat Veterans have uploaded video and images of their deployment and combat experiences, and will watch and view past traumatic events on social media, such as YouTube. This is our first generation of Veterans to experience this.

Any unit, any deployment,

So, what should we do?

SocMed data can be used to prevent suicide.

Several current studies show we can predict suicide death months, weeks, and even 1 day before death.

Soldier social media data may save many civilian lives.
